I always loved listening to elderly people reminisce, though they tend to wander and tell about whatever happens to come to mind. This book is written in a way that feels like you are listening to "Granny" tell her story. Some may not enjoy the wondering nature of the "conversation", but it does make you feel like Granny has met you at the door and said, "Come in this House," because she is eager to get to know another friend.

I loved hearing all her "southern sayings" as most of them were ones my own family has used. Her stories of the ice cream socials were also quite special. Like Granny, I also believe hand-cranked ice cream can't be bested. We still make all our ice cream this way, even in the middle of winter ... in a 1927 White Mountain hand crank ice cream maker.

I haven't enjoyed a book this much in a long time! It took me back to my childhood and things I had forgotten about. I got lots of chuckles throughout the book at all the antics some were up to. Most of all, it gave me a warm feeling and feeling as if I was part of the family.
